Description:

A shady pottery collector is murdered in sunny New Mexico in this mystery in a “winning series” (Susan Wittig Albert).

This series is obviously copied, stolen, borrowed(?) from the Lawrence Sanders The Burglar Who... series. Thieving business owner with single female confidante who tries to keep his feet on the ground etc. Unfortunately it's a pale imitation of the Bernie Rhodenbarr (sp?) series. The characters are one dimensional. The protagonist is apparently not very bright but I don't think it was the author's intention to make him like that. The allegedly clever dialogue is stale, platitudinous and rife with clichés. Another review called it laugh out loud funny. That reviewer should watch a little Monty Python or read A Confederacy of Dunces. Now that is laugh out loud funny. Also this is more a novelette than novel. It took me an hour and a half to read. Page after page is filler, with characters sitting around eating chips and salsa and drinking Margaritas. Every day? Give me a break. The plot was thin at best. I had the murderer suss the first time he or she rode in the Cadillac. I'll not buy another one in this series and I suggest that if this sort of novel(ette) is to your taste, read The Burglar series by Lawrence Sanders if you haven't already. One star because the author wrote a book. Another because I was able to finish it despite its flaws. In an hour and a half.
